HIGHLIGHTS FISCAL YEAR 2008

DEVELOPMENT HIGHLIGHTS

JULY 1, 2007–JUNE 30, 2008

Carolina brought in a record $301 million in private gifts in fiscal year 2008. This marked the first time Carolina has surpassed the $300 million mark in school history and the fourth straight year that the University has raised more than $200 million in cash and other assets in a single year. The total represents the fifth straight record-setting year for this type of support, which accounts for money that is immediately available to the University.

In commitments, which include pledges as well as gifts, Carolina secured $342.8 million in fiscal year 2008.

FY 2008 gifts by purpose, rounded to nearest $100,000

Highlights from the year:

As a result of Dennis and Joan Gillings' historic $50 million commitment to the School of Public Health in February 2007, 10 competitively selected Gillings Innovation Labs and three Gillings Visiting Professorships were created in the School of Public Health (since renamed the Gillings School of Global Public Health) to address global public health issues with improved research, teaching and service.

Alumnus Fred Eshelman committed $10 million to the School of Pharmacy to support cancer research and pharmacy education initiatives. Matching funds from North Carolina's University Cancer Research Fund and the Pharmacy Network Foundation brought the total value to $20 million. Altogether, Eshelman has committed about $33 million to the school; it was renamed the UNC Eshelman School of Pharmacy in May 2008 in his honor.

Progress made on special campaigns during FY 2008

The William R. Kenan Jr. Charitable Trust committed $6 million to the College of Arts And Sciences' Honors Program to help increase the number of students served by the program. The support adds faculty to teach honors courses. A $3 million grant from the North Carolina Distinguished Professors Endowment Trust brought its total value to $9 million.

A $5 million gift from an anonymous donor to the Honors Program is funding five new professorships in honor of UNC alumni Peter Thacher Grauer and William Burwell Harrison. State matching funds add an additional $2.5 million, creating a $7.5 million endowment.

In support for the arts at Carolina, former UNC Chancellor William McCoy and his wife Sara made two commitments totaling $1.1 million to create the James Moeser Fund for Artistic Excellence. The first came as a $100,000 gift; the second will come to UNC as part of the McCoy's estate. The fund honors concert organist and former Chancellor James Moeser, who stepped down as Carolina's chancellor on June 30, 2008. The fund will support the Office of the Executive Director for the Arts, which was created during Moeser's tenure to bolster the arts on campus, and ensure that artists at the highest level of excellence will teach students in master classes, engage with faculty through symposia and research and perform for students, faculty, staff and the community.

UNC alumnus David Kittner, an attorney in Philadelphia, and the Samuel and Rebecca Kardon Foundation gave $1 million to establish an endowed innovation fund for the future of the School of Medicine's Department of Ophthalmology. The largest ever received by the department, the gift enables the department to operate and expand its patient care, educational programs and services, and clinical research projects and activities under a new name: the Kittner Eye Center. The center was renamed in a ceremony in June 2008.

GlaxoSmithKline awarded a $367,172 grant to UNC's Morehead Planetarium and Science Center to support the creation of the Science in the Summer program in North Carolina. The initiative will target science education through summer camps for second- through eighth-grade students and teacher workshops at libraries in six counties across the state.

Retired social services worker and School of Social Work alumna Melvarene Adair established a charitable gift annuity with the UNC Foundation, directing nearly $1.4 million to the School of Social Work—one of the largest gifts in the Alumnus William G. Allen committed $2 million to Kenan-Flagler Business School to support enhancement of the school's undergraduate and graduate sales program. The program aims to bring sales practitioners into the classroom to expose students to the practical aspects of the industry and to career opportunities in sales. The support will help recruit a professor in the program and an administrator to develop and manage guest speaker and sales training programs.

Alumnus C. Felix Harvey, chairman of Harvey Enterprises & Affiliates and founder of the Little Bank Inc., along with his family, has given $2 million to UNC to acknowledge the University's significance to them and the important role Carolina has played in the lives of five generations of the Harvey family. The gift creates an endowment to fund the C. Felix Harvey Award to Advance Institutional Priorities, which will support institutional initiatives such as undergraduate education, community engagement, research and economic development in the areas of medicine, business, science, the humanities, law and the environment.

A $2.5 million grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation of New York is making a significant contribution to medieval and early modern studies at UNC. The grant enables the College of Arts and Sciences to extend the program's reach beyond the European borders of the medieval and early modern world to China, Southeast Asia and Japan, the Caribbean and Latin America. UNC will use $1 million of the grant to endow the Mellon Distinguished Professorship of medieval and early modern studies, supplemented by the N.C. Distinguished Professors Endowment Trust Fund. With support from the provost's office, additional faculty will be hired to teach and research new areas of medieval and early modern studies. Faculty and graduate students' research and teaching, as well as graduate student recruitment, will benefit from $1.5 million from the foundation.
